

A scholarship of up to £8,750, payable towards tuition fees, will be awarded annually to a Queen's medical student to undertake an Intercalated degree at the School of Medicine, Dentistry & Biomedical Sciences.

Three Mathews brothers, Samson, Robert and Samuel, from a farming family in Co Antrim, graduated in Medicine from Queen's in the 1880s. The three young men left Ireland and established medical practices in Sheffield, England and commenced a family tradition of medical graduation (mostly Queen's Belfast), that has spanned five generations and produced almost 50 physicians throughout the world.

In recognition of this tradition Dr Colin Wallace Mathews (QUB 1979), of the 4th generation, has established "The Mathews Family Trust" to fund an annual scholarship to be awarded to a Queen's medical student to undertake one of the intercalated degrees listed below.

The successful student will fulfil the eligibility criteria as set out below:

1. This Award is open to current medical students and will be conditional upon successful completion of your third or fourth year (whichever year you are intercalating after) at first attempt and achieving an overall profile which is 2.1 equivalent.
2. Candidates must have submitted an application by the closing date to study one of the following Postgraduate Taught programmes within the School of Medicine, Dentistry & Biomedical Sciences:
 - MSc Cancer Medicine
 - MSc Experimental Medicine
 - MSc Bioinformatics and Computational Genomics
 - MSc Clinical Anatomy
 - Masters in Public Health
 - MPH in Global Health

Applicants complete the application form and answer the following question in 300 words or fewer:

What are your reasons for wishing to undertake an Intercalated Masters programme. The Academic background of candidates will also be taken into consideration.
